

I Support The Cabinet Appointment Of El Chapo

Let's Give Him A Chance!

Hey, sure, why not?

I'll admit, I was surprised when I first heard about President Trump's cabinet nomination of Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman. I wasn't convinced he was the best fit for Chair of the Council of Economic Advisers. El Chapo is currently imprisoned, and to some he is the epitome of a "bad hombre." He also has only a formal third grade education. But since our new President is not reputedly much of a reader, it's no longer imperative that this position be filled with a distinguished economist.

Instead of an academic, we need an industrious outsider who can shake things up in complacent Washington! And this recently-extradited narcotics authority exemplifies several American values:

1. He understands small and big business.

Joaquin Guzman's rags-to-riches career is inspiring. Born into a poor family, El Chapo worked his way up to lead the Sinaloa Cartel, a pharmaceutical enterprise with annual earnings of over $2 billion! A workaholic executive, he's even successfully run his company from prison. He is against the suffocating bureaucracy and legislation that impede business success.

2. He can help create new jobs.

As America feels increasingly despondent and seeks to "check out" more and more, the need for accessible drugs is expected to skyrocket. Sinaloa will need more manpower offering hope and heroin. Given the opportunity, El Chapo could found the McDonald's of drugs. Are we going to pass up on this chance, and give away more jobs to Mexico? Not when a career in drug sales offers a flexible schedule that suits working families!

3. He's an infrastructure genius.

Build a wall? Maybe. Build tunnels? Absolutely.

El Chapo and his colleagues are master tunnel artists. Tunnels offer safe, reliable passage in times of severe weather and war, both high future probabilities. Tunnel construction will also add thousands more jobs. Sure, we could “build bridges, not walls,” but why not “build tunnels and walls”?

4. He will keep our country secure.

Mr. Guzman claims to have killed over 2,000 people himself in his career. There is no way he did that without firearms. He is a sure defender of the Second Amendment.

He’s also pro-military, owning a personal fleet of boats, trucks, airplanes and submarines. And as a proponent of torture, he could offer creative input to the President on war tactics and trade “negotiations.”

5. He is a family man.

El Chapo has been married at least 3 times and is reportedly a father to more than 10 children. And one of the times when he escaped prison, he took the time to do the laundry just before, showing he appreciates domestic work. Too sweet!

6. He's a Christian.

He believes in God. I can tell by his kind eyes, can't you?

7. I know what's in El Chapo's heart.

I just do. Yes, he has made mistakes; no one's perfect. But he means well. Let's give him a chance!

I know this all sounds crazy. But it's 2017! A former oil CEO as Secretary of State and a confused neurosurgeon as Secretary of HUD took us all by surprise at first, too. El Chapo may be just the unpredictable leader we need to change the establishment. Let's capture him in our cabinet before this opportunity escapes us.

It's time for change. It's time for El Chapo.
